<tr>
<th>ACTIVATING EVENT</th>
<th>BELIEF</th>
<th>CONSEQUENCE</th>

<tbody>
<tr>
<td>A</td>
<td>B</td>
<td>C</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

“Something happens”
“I tell myself something”
“I feel and do something”

For example

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Someone in my apartment complex turns out the lights</th>
<th>Someone is in the hall planning to attack me</th>
<th>Scares; shivering; panicky</th>
</tr>
</thead>
</table>

Does it make sense to tell yourself “B” above?

What can you tell yourself on such occasion in the future?
Challenging Questions Sheet

Beliefs:

1. What is the evidence for and against this idea?

2. Are you confusing a habit with a fact?

3. Are your interpretations of the situation too far removed from reality to be accurate?

4. Are you thinking in all-or-none terms?

5. Are you using words or phrases that are extreme or exaggerated? (i.e. always, forever, never, need, should, must can’t and every time.)

6. Are you taking selected examples out of context?

7. Are you making excuses? (I’m not afraid, I just don’t want to go out, other people expect me to be perfect, or I don’t want to make the call because I don’t have the time)

8. Is the source of information reliable?

9. Are you thinking in terms of certainties instead of probabilities?

10. Are you confusing a low probability with a high probability?

11. Are your judgments based on feelings rather than facts?

12. Are you focusing on irrelevant factors?
Listed below are several types of faulty thinking patterns that people use in different life situations. These patterns often become automatic, habitual thoughts that cause us to engage in self-defeating behaviour.

Considering your own stuck points, find examples for each of the patterns. Write in the stuck point under the appropriate pattern and describe how it fits that pattern. Think about how that pattern affects you.

1. Drawing conclusions when evidence is lacking or even contradictory.
2. Exaggerating or minimizing the meaning of an event (you blow things way out of proportion or shrink their importance inappropriately)
3. Disregarding important aspects of a situation
4. Oversimplifying events or beliefs as good/bad or right/wrong.
5. Overgeneralizing from a single incident (you view a negative event as a never-ending pattern of defeat.
6. Mind-reading (you assume that people are thinking negatively of you when there is no definite evidence for this)
7. Emotional reasoning (you reason from how you feel)
